INTEGRATED FOOTBALL HISTORY

Integrated Football aims to provide the opportunity for people with disabilities to be involved and participate in the game of footy, while gaining from all the social, intellectual and physical benefits which comes from community football.

Peter Grosser was a member of the WA Amateur Football League Board and was instrumental in introducing Integrated Football to Western Australia after watching a game over east.

“I went over to Victoria to watch the interstate U23s and whilst we were there we saw what was called Integrated Football, which I took some interest in because I have a disabled son,” he said.

Integrated Football came into swing in 2008-09, but Mr Grosser said the ideas and planning of Integrated Football in WA started years prior.

“I made some further enquiries that year – around 2006 – and we put together a working party to investigate how we could best set up Integrated Football back here and which model we would use,” he said.

“We chose a club-based model, as opposed to team-based and then we got all the necessary approvals, and we started the Come-N-Try philosophy.”

Mr Grosser said Come-N-Try days was tried in the early days, before the popularity of Integrated Football grew in numbers and teams.

“We had two or three Come-N-Trys throughout the year because up until we started there was no football for disabled people, so we then had to adapt rules so people with disability could play the game,” he said.

Mr Grosser said there was much to consider when forming the rules and competition format for Integrated Football.

“The oval was a bit smaller, only because some of the players couldn’t run that far, so we did two games on one oval,” he said.

“It was along the lines of getting them up to speed and getting them fitter I suppose, so they could actually run out four quarters which were 15 minutes long.

B DIVISION PREVIEW

Fremantle CBC head into the decider as this season's minor premiers and the first side to qualify. Coach Deklan Harvey believes it's been Fremantle's best season yet:

"The way this group has presented themselves on the field is a true testament to the work they've put in, not just as a team but also individually."

Key players include Kyron Timms, who has been rock-solid down back and able to push into the midfield, Zane Winn, whose development in the ruck and midfield has made him a game-changer, and Nick Rogerson, a consistent leader and reliable performer across the season.

Their opponents, North Beach, have fought hard to earn a second shot at Fremantle after toppling University in last weekend's preliminary final. Manager Claire Pieters says 2025 has been a breakout year:

"In previous years our best result was four wins, but something clicked this season. The group has taken their skills to a whole new level... and to now be in a Grand Final is a huge achievement."

Since entering the Integrated competition in 2017 with just five players, North Beach has grown into a 34-player squad — an incredible success story for the club. Pieters credits not just the football but the community:

"The standout moments aren't just about what happens on the field. It's the respect shown to every player; the friendships formed, and the sense of belonging this club has given the players and their families."

With both Fremantle CBC and North Beach scoring wins over each other this season, this grand final rematch promises to be a classic.

A DIVISION PREVIEW

In the afternoon, Kingsway meet Kelmscott in what shapes as a blockbuster A Division Grand Final.

Kingsway, the minor premiers, have set the standard in 2025, defeating Willetton in the semi-finals to secure their place. Coach Dave Wright says their strength has been in the culture they've built:

"Our season so far has been incredible, with the group really embracing a 'family' environment. It hasn't been without its challenges, but the way the players have supported each other has been inspiring – and we're excited to have earned this opportunity on Saturday."

For Kingsway, keep an eye on Alex Moshovis and Callum Bull, who both represented WA in 2024. Alongside them, Matthew Iles, Kayden Rodgers, and Vinnie Fraser have been standout contributors throughout the season and will be looking to finish the year strongly.

On the other side, Kelmscott come in as the form team of the finals. After dispatching High Wycombe and Curtin Uni Wesley, they produced a statement win in the preliminary final, knocking out last year's premiers Willetton. Their mix of aggressive forwards and resolute defenders has given them serious momentum.

Forward Fraser Kickett, this year's leading goal scorer, is always dangerous around goals, while Daniel Harvey, captain of the 2024 WA Inclusion Team, brings leadership and composure. In defence, Trent Flemming has been a pillar at centre half-back and will be vital in keeping Kingsway's attack in check.
